

Techies among Stevie award winners

Janine Popick.

Sunnyvale, CA – The Stevie awards for women in business were created in 2004 to honor achievements and contributions of woman-led organizations and female entrepreneurs and executives worldwide. The award process is governed by a board of judges and advisors including nearly fifty leading figures in business; one of them is Helen Greiner, co-founder of iRobot.

There are fifty award categories for women and WBEs. Techies and technical companies that received awards include:

Best Asian executive: Sangita Singh, head of enterprise application services, Wipro Technologies, Bangalore, Karnataka, India.

Best entrepreneur, non-services business up to 100 employees: Dr Christina Lampe-Onnerud, founder and CEO, Boston-Power, Inc, Westborough, MA.

Best entrepreneur, service businesses up to 100 employees in computer software and services: Janine Popick, CEO, VerticalResponse, San Francisco, CA.

Best Latin American entrepreneur or executive: Nellie Borrero, senior director of global inclusion and diversity, Accenture.

For more information on the Stevies, see www.stevieawards.com/women. D/C

